PRESIDENT ADDRESSES PAN-AMERICAN SAVANTS

Cheered by Delegates as He Points Out the Mission of Humanity and Justice of the American Nations.

President Wilson, at a meeting of the Pan-American Scientific Congress, held last night, at Memorial Continental Hall, felicitated the delegates on the work the congress has accomplished. In an address dealing with Latin American affairs, the relations of those countries to each other, to the United States, and of all of the American republics to the world at large, he stirred his auditors to enthusiasm, as he outlined the Washington government's plan for a pan-American alliance guaranteeing absolute political independence and territorial integrity.

President Wilson was introduced to the members of the congress, the women of their families and a great audience, which included members of the cabinet and other Washington officials, by Senor Don Suarez-Mujica, the ambassador of Chile, who is president of the scientific congress. The ambassador characterized President Wilson as "a statesman who has radically changed the nature of the relations among the peoples of this continent and who has built an American international policy of mutual esteem and co-operation, at this very moment praised and applauded by the whole continent."

The Latin American delegates by vigorous applause freely subcribed to this sentiment, when Amassador Suarez spoke in English, and again when Domicio da Gama, ambasador of Brazil, rendered into Spanish he words of his colleague. These three were the only speakers.

In his address, President Wilson disclosed for the first time the details of the proposals which it is admitted were submitted last week by Mr. Lansing, the Secretary of State, to South and Central American diplomats, to be used as a basis for an agreement between the republics of the western hemisphare.

The United States proposes, the President said, that all the American nations shall agree to settle all pending boundary disputes as soon as possible by amicable process, and to dispose of all disputes in future by arbitration. All countries, under this plan, he said, would agree that no revolutionary expedition shall be outfitted against or supplies for revolutionists shipped to neighboring states. Americas to Enlighten the World,

He was applauded heartily when he aid that the Monroe doctrine would always be maintained by the United States on its own authority. He re-marked that the doctrine when laid down had not disclosed what attitude the United States might eventually assume toward its neighbors to the south, and that as a result the other nations had been distrustful of the United States. With this the delegates evidently agreed. An understanding, however, had come, he said, and he declared he spoke "for the solid and eternal foundations of justice and humanity." down had not disclosed what attitude nanity."

"God grant," the President exclaim-d, "that it may be given to the Ameri-as to lift this light on high for the il-imination of the world!"

After expressing regret at his inability to be present to greet congress at its opening session, the President said: "I have been told so much about the proceedings of this congress that I feel that I can congratulate you upon the increasing sense of comradeship marked its sessions from day to day; and it is a very happy circumstance in our view that this, perhaps the most Cannot Pause at Commerce.

"But, ladies and gentlemen, our thought cannot pause at the artificial boundaries of the fields of science and of commerce. All boundaries that diof commerce. All boundaries that divided life into sections and interests are artificial, because life is all of a piece. You cannot treat part of it without by implication and indirection treating all of it, and the field of science is not to be distinguished from the field of life any more than the field of commerce is to be distinguished from the general field of life. No one who reflects upon the progress of science or the spread of the arts of peace or the extension and perfection of any of the practical arts of life can fall to see that there is only one atmosphere that these things can breathe, and that is an atmosphere of mutual confidence and of peace and of ordered political life among the nations. Amid war and revolution even the voice of science for the most part must be silent, and revolution tears up the very roots of everything that makes life go steadily forward and the light grow from generation to generation. For nothing stirs passion like political disturbance, and passion is the enemy of truth.

"These things were realized with vide life into sections and interests turbance, and passion is the enemy of truth.

These things were realized with peculiar vividness and said with unusual eloquence in a recent conference held in this city for the purpose of considering the financial relations between the two continents of America, because it was perceived that financiers can do nothing without the co-operation of governments, and if merchants would deal with one another, laws must agree with one another; that you cannot make laws vary without making them contradict, and that amid contradictory laws the easy flow of commercial intercourse is impossible, and that, therefore, a financial congress naturally led to all the inferences of politics. For politics I conceive to be nothing more than the science of the ordered progress of society along the lines of greatest usefulness and convenience to itself.

other; that they have a great deal that ti is very desirable they should exchange and share with one another; that they have kept unnaturally and unfortunately separated and apart when they had a manifest and obvious community of interest; and the object of that conference was to ascertain the practical means by which the commercial and practical intercourse of the two continents could be quickened and facilitated. And where events move statesmen, if they be not indifferent or be not asleep, must think and act.

"For my own part, I congratulate myself upon living in a time when these things, always susceptible of intellectual demonstration, have begun to be very widely and universally appreciated and when the seatesmen of the two American continents have more and more come into candid, trustful, mutual conference, comparing views as to the practical and friendly way of helping one another and of setting forward every handsome enterprise on this side of the Atlantic.

"But these gentlemen have not conferred without realizing that back of all the material community of interest of which I have spoken there lies and must lie a community of political interest. I have been told a very interit is very desirable they should ex-

of which I have spoken there lies and must lie a community of political interest. I have been told a very interesting fact—I hope it is true—that while this congress has been discussing science it has been, in spite of itself, led into the feeling that behind the science there was some inference with regard to politics, and that if the Americas were to be united in thought they must in some degree sympathetically be united in action. What these statesmen who have been conferring from month to month in Washington have come to realize is that back of the community of material interest there is a community of political interest.

"I am profoundly moved," declared little intercourse is embarrassed. That is the reason I take it, if it be true, as I hope it is, that your thoughts even during this congress, though the questions of the two extremes. I am convinced during this congress, though the questions of the church, but for the everlasting peace of the world." what sense I use those words. I do not and it is a very happy circumstance in our view that this, perhaps the most vital and successful of the meetings of this congress, should have occurred in the capital of our own country, because we should wish to regard this as the universal place where ideas worth while are exchanged and shared. The drawing together of the Americas ladies and gentlemen, has long been dreamed of and desired. It is a matter of peculiar gratification, therefore, to see this great thing happen; to see the Americas drawing together upon any insubstantial foundation of mere sentiment.

"After all, even friendship must be based upon a perception of common sympathies, of common interests, of common ideals and of common purposes. Men cannot be friends unless they intend the same things, and the Americas have more and more realized that in all essential particulars they intend the same things with regard to their thought and their life and their activities. To be privileged, therefore, to see this drawing together in friendship and communion based upon these solid foundations affords every one who looks on with open eyes peculiar satisfaction and joy; and it has seemed to me that the language of simpersonal thought, the language of impersonal thought, the language of impersonal thought, the language of individual interest, but along what are intended to be the direct and searching lines of truth itself, was a very fortunate language in which to express this community of interest and of sympathy.

frank interchange of views between the authorities in Washington and those who authorities in Washington and those who represented the other states of this hemisphere, an interchange of views charming and hopeful, because based upon an increasingly sure appreciation of the spirit in which they were undertaken. These gentlemen have seen that if America is to come into her own, into her legitimate own, in a world of peace and order, she must establish the foundations of amity so that no one will hereafter doubt them.

"I hope and I believe that this can be accomplished. These conferences have enabled me to foresee how it will be accomplished. It will be accomplished in the first place by the states of America uniting in guaranteeing to each other absolutely political independence and territorial integrity. In the second place, and as a necessary corollary to that guaranteeing the agreement to settle all pending boundary disputes among themselves, should they unhappily arise, will be handled by patient, impartial investigation and settled by arbitration; and the agreement necessary to the peace of the Americas, that no state of either continent will permit revolutionary expeditions against another state to be fitted out on its territory, and that they will prohibit the exportation of the munitions of war for the purpose of supplying revolutionists against neighboring governments.

"You see what our thought is, gentlemen, not only the international peace of America, but the domestic peace of America, but the domestic peace of America. If American states are constantly in ferment, if any of them are constantly in ferment, there will be a standing threat to their relations with one another. It is just as much to our interest to assist each other to the orderly processes within our own borders as it is to orderly processes in our controversies with one another. These are very practical suggestions which have sprung up in the minds of thoughtful men, and I for my part believe that they are going to lead the way to something that America has prayed for for many a generation. For they are based, in the first place, so far as the strong states are concerned, upon the handsome principle of self-restraint and respect for the rights of everybody. They are based upon the principle of self-restraint and respect for the rights of everybody. They are based upon the principle of self-restraint and respect for the rights of everybody. They are based upon the principle of self-restraint and respect for the rights of everybody. They are based upon the principle of self-restraint and respect for the rights of everybody. They are based upon the principle of self-restraint and respect for the rights of everybody. They are based upon the p strong states are concerned, upon the handsome principle of self-restraint and respect for the rights of everybody. They are based upon the principles of absolute political equality among the states, equality of right, not equality of indulgence. They are based, in short, upon the solid, eternal foundations of justice and humanity.

"No man can turn away from these things without turning away from the hope of the world. These are things, ladies and gentlemen, for which the world has hoped and waited with prayerful heart. God grant that it may be granted to America to lift this light on high for the illumination of the world."

Chicago, June 7.

Forty-four delegates at large and two from each congressional district are to be chosen, and unless some arrangements can be made by which candidates for delegate will have no opposition, it is thought that the convention will be well in its work, perhaps at an end, before the successful candidates will be known. Secretary R. B. Bernheim of the state committee, said today that an early meeting of the committee would be held to pass upon a plan now being worked out to unravel the tangle.
